ETRAVELOGUE LAUNCHES NEW FREE ROAD TRIP PLANNING WEBSITE

Salem, MA (PRWEB) June 14, 2007 -- eTravelogue.com, the award winning Internet site that enables vacationers and travel planners to produce road trip itineraries and find attractions of interest along their routes, has launched an entirely new, completely interactive road trip itinerary planner. All travel planning tools at eTravelogue.com are completely free of charge.

The new road trip planner provides a number of tools useful to travelers planning road trips, including interactive maps and directions, city guides, attraction reviews, road construction information, and television and radio listings by geography and route plan. Users now have a single source on the Internet with which to plan road trips.

eTravelogue.com provides one-stop-shopping for road trip planning information in a very user-friendly format. "It is perfect for planning a trip," wrote one user of the site. "Everything is understandable and (the) links are easy to navigate", commented another user in a recent survey.

With eTravelogue.com, travelers create road trip itineraries by choosing the start and end points of their trip, selecting attraction categories (museums, amusement parks, etc.), and a maximum distance from their route. The site then produces an interactive route map showing attractions matching these criteria. From this list, users decide which attractions they'd like to visit. The user's itinerary then is updated to include these attractions and driving directions, maps, event listings, road construction information, and radio/TV listings are generated.

Thousands of travelers have used eTravelogue.com, resulting in hundreds of road trips planned every day. The website has received accolades from Cool Site of the Day, Kim Komando, and Woman's World Magazine, as has been named a top 100 travel website.
